One should be a temple in relation to anyone with a prompt answer to a question such as: "What is the secret of happiness?" Emotions - and happiness in particular - are very subjective. Crowning a hill on a roller coaster is a happy occasion for some and a nightmare for others, for example. If happiness is subjective, how can we qualify him enough to understand what takes us to happiness? Most of the researchers have discovered that simply asking people what makes them happy works Best.By Survey common people and add the data, the members of Campos as far as social psychology, epidemiology and economy are with what Many see as a better understanding of what makes us happy. The secret of happiness, it seems, is not much of an anymore.one Secret of the researchers Initial conclusions in the field of happiness came to contradict the long-time assumption: that money translates into happiness. At every of 1970, Economist George Easterlin found that while income in the United States grew after World War II, he informed Happiness in the country do not keep pace. Easterlin found that it is applied to other developed nations. Over time, the so-called Easterlin paradox was refined - money makes it increase happiness to certain degrees - but the data suggest that once the basic needs such as food, shelter and health care are guaranteed, income Falls out of the stage with Happiness.Instead, the researchers found that humans experience happiness through relationships involved that grants us a feeling of belonging, and activities and lifestyles that dedicate them to them. In fact, some psychoons are confident that what makes people happy can be reduced to three categories: genetically, choices and circumstances of the life of a [source: rowe].most people who study happiness They concluded that the genetic predisposition for happiness - called happiness trait - is responsible for a large part of what makes human beings happy. As much as 50 percent of why we are happy can be found in our genes [Source: Barber]. The other half of human happiness is a little more within our control. While about 10 percent are the circumstances of life, such as income and relationships, the remaining 40 percent consists of choices made by the individual [source: rowe]. Making positive choices How to get back to a wallet found stuffed with money to your legitimate owner or remain faithful to the cA'njuge are part of the secret to happiness, say some researchers.others put more to the relationships in relation. People who have narrow relationships with others tend to be happier. A study performed by found that the number of happy people in someone's life could increase happiness in a person in a predictable way. Every happy person in a person's life has increased his chances of being happy at 9 percent [source: christakis and fowler] state. The known as flow is also thought to be a part of what makes us happy. In this state, where it is totally involved in an activity such as work or a hobby, exists between being stuck Being oppressed [Source: Myers]. When in flow, talents and interests of a person are used and the task undertaken is usually met with the investigation of success.science for what makes us happy is still a relatively young and still It's turns with a chicken-or-o-egg issue: are the traces found in happy people the factors that make them happy happy Are they just characteristic of happy people? Research will have to determine the answer to this before it will be able to totally unlock the secret of happiness.page 2Are you happy? It is a simple question, but with variable innumers à € à €
